the way

As a child, I was afraid of the dark because I thought there were monsters in my closet. Now that I'm older, I know there isn't any such things... but I'm still afraid of the dark. There's something about not being able to see what's in front of me that makes me uneasy. Even when I'm in my own house or somewhere that I'm very familiar with, I don't like not being able to see. I'm one of those people, who if I'm at home alone after dark, every light in the house is on. I think it's just a control thing. But one thing that I've learned with my relationship with God, is that I'm NOT in control... He is! God promises that He will light the way, He will show us where we need to go. However, it's only going to be one step at a time. We would like God to turn on the light and show us everything, but that's not the way it works. His Word will be a lamp unto our feet, just enough light to see how to take the next step. Sometimes it's frustrating to be in the dark and even a little scary. But we just have to depend on God and remember He's in control. If God were to turn on the light and reveal everything all at once, we would take off down the path and think we can handle everything on our own. But there's nothing like being in the dark that'll make you want to cling tighter to the light. God has a perfect plan for your life, just cling to Him. He has all the answers and will reveal them when you need them. Not in our timing, but in His... one step at a time!

Psalm

119:105

*Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto
my path.*
